Understanding the Bangladesh Income Tax Structure

Bangladesh's income tax system, as explained in various publications and analyses by experts like Nikhil Chandra Shil, operates on a progressive tax structure. This means that higher earners pay a larger percentage of their income in taxes. The tax rates are determined by the annual taxable income, and they are revised periodically by the National Board of Revenue (NBR). The system categorizes taxpayers into various slabs, each with a different tax rate. For instance, a lower income bracket might face a 10% tax rate, while a higher income bracket could be subject to a 25% or even higher rate. These rates are applied to the income earned within each bracket, resulting in a progressive tax burden.

Tax Slabs and Rates: A Closer Look

The specific tax slabs and rates are subject to change, so consulting the official NBR website or seeking guidance from a tax professional like those familiar with Nikhil Chandra Shil's work is crucial for up-to-date information.
